WILL BE MECCA FOR TOURISTS WHEN PARK COMPLETED

When the present projects are completed, and the old Court House and Village and the Surrender grounds are restored, then Appomattox will truly take its rightful place as one of Virginia's great shrines. People from all parts of the United States stop by Appomattox on their tours of the state. But now they find the famous McLean House gone, the old Surrender village badly preserved and many important locations missing.

HERE'S THE OLD COURT HOUSE CIRCLE-- TODAY

MOST places of interest. But with the Restoration here, no section of the Old Dominion will be a greater lure than this section.

What would make a more inviting trip for tourists than to swing down Virginia's glamorous SKY-LINE DRIVE to Lynchburg; thence to Appomattox and a pause here to view the RESTORED scenes of the Surrender; and thence on east to Richmond and a glimpse of the historical lore of Eastern Virginia.

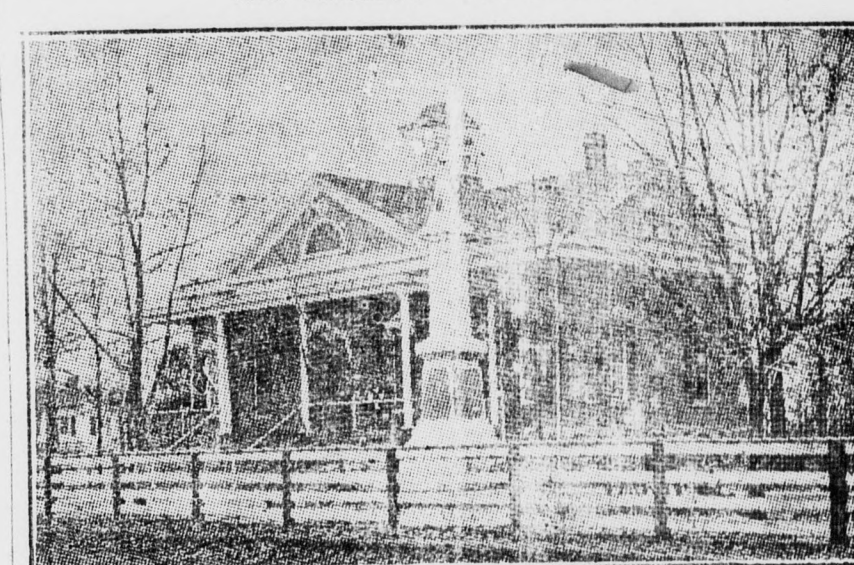

Maybe that's just what the tourists which will take them by the

MINISTER SAVED AX

Rev. Sam Mullan, a minister responsible for saving the ax used by the Confederate soldiers in cutting down the famous apple tree under which Lee rested here. He came along a few days later while the ax was on the ground and saved it. It was kept by the Ragland family for many years before trace of it was finally lost.

He: Bobbie, will you be sorry when I marry your sister?
Bobbie: Yes sir, I'll be sorry for you, 'cause I like you.

HOW JOHN W. DANIEL DESCRIBED SURRENDER

It is generally recognized that the late John W. Daniel was one of the most brilliant orators Virginia ever produced. Here is the way he described the Surrender at Appomattox:

"And so the guns of the last charge died away in the morning air, and the echo like the sob of a mighty sea rolled up the valley of the James and was still. The last fight of the Army of Northern Virginia had been fought. The end had come. The startled birds renewed their songs over the stricken fields and the battle smelt was drowned in the fragrance of the flowering spring. The ragged soldiers of the South, God bless them stood there facing the dread reality more terrible than death. . . stood there to grapple with and face despair, for they had done their all and all was lost. . . save honor."

Little Wifey: Ain't people funny?
Little Hubby: Yes, if you tell a man that he's a hero. 2767894442 stars in the universe he'll believe you, but if a sign says "FRESH PAINT" that same man has to make a personal investigation. —Pathfinder.

Let's RESORE the Surrender Village.

Keeping Faith

It is indeed appropriate at this time to consider the idealism of a past age, and to launch a project whereby our children may know the tradition of our fathers.

We too have a tradition to uphold - a tradition of honesty and good faith with our customers, of the best in quality, the highest service, moderate price. On this historic date we pledge you an earnest and sincere continuation of our policy.
